REPUBLICAN'S MAINTAIN 4-1 SPENDING EDGE DESPITE FUNDRAISING DECLINE OVER PRIOR CYCLES

WASHINGTON -- As the November congressional elections approach, the National Republican party committees have outspent their Democratic counterparts by more than $118 million, according to a study by the Federal Election Commission.

Reports filed with the FEC show that the Republican's national, senatorial and congressional committees raised and spent $159 million while the Democratic committees raised $37 million and spent $40 million from January 1, 1989, through October 17, 1990.

In terms of candidate support, Republican party committees gave $1.8 million in direct contributions compared to just over $900,000 for Democratic committees. The GOP also spent $7.4 million in coordinated expenditures compared to $5.8 million for the Democrats.

Compared to 1985-86, the last non-presidential election cycle, financial activity has remained level for Democratic committees while receipts fell $30 million and spending dropped $26 million for the Republicans.

In addition to direct contributions and coordinated expenditures, the Republican party has provided additional support by means of two joint fundraising committees - Republican Senatorial Inner Circle 1990 and 1990-91. These committees have distributed a combined total of $1.9 million to 49 senate candidates. Details of these activities are attached to this release.

The National Republican Party has transferred $3.7 million to various state Republican party committees; the Democrats, $1.6 million. An itemization of these transactions by party and by state is also attached.
