55.9 PERCENT TURNOUT IN 1992 PRESIDENTIAL ELECTION HIGHEST SINCE 1968

WASHINGTON -- Some 13 million more Americans voted for President in the 1992 general election than voted in the 1988 election, according to a final compilation by the Federal Election Commission.

According to certified returns by the individual states, a total of 104,552,736 voters cast ballots on November 3. The 1988 turnout was 91,594,693.

Voters last year represented 55.9 percent of the 187,033,000 Americans of voting age estimated by the Bureau of the Census as of July 1, 1991, the most recent number available. That is the highest percentage turnout in a presidential election since 1968. In 1988, those voting represented 50.15 percent of the 182,628,000 Americans of voting age.

Twenty-three candidates plus "write-in" and, in Nevada "None of the Above", shared the votes. Only four candidates were on the ballot in all the states: Bill Clinton (DEM), George Bush (REP), Ross Perot (IND) and Andre Marrou (LIB).

The certified returns show that Bill Clinton received 44,908,233 votes (42.95%), George Bush received 39,102,282 (37.40%), and Ross Perot received 19,721,433 (18.86%).

The FEC compilation is from official state election sources, and the counts are based on individual state definitions of a valid vote cast and counted for a candidate.

Estimated voting age population figures, upon which the FEC bases its statistics, are provided each year by the Bureau of the Census. Because of the variety of state laws governing voter registration, there is no official record of total registered voters in the United States.

A compilation of state-by-state voting for U. S. Senate and House of Representatives in the 1992 general election will be available in the Spring.
